Agenda

The wee problem of superfluous laptop

I've finished "researching" (buying up half of Zara) and I need to "observe Wharf life" (have a little rest), so I'm "working" in Starbucks. I have a hot chocolate in a mug the size of my head, a bottle of water and I'm considering risking the food. There is an army of people who work in cafes across the Wharf. It's a charming throwback to the coffee houses of yore, where great works of literature, politics and philosophy were brewed. Though today cafes are full of people checking off career development criteria lists and discussing sales forecasts. There's just one catch:

BLONDE'S EYE VIEW

when you work from a coffee shop, what do you do when you need a wee?

I blame the industrial-size hot chocolate. On the Wharf you are never more than a couple of minutes from a self-flushing toilet, but I daren't leave my laptop unattended.

I might as well erect a neon sign above saying "pinch me". I could ask someone to keep an eye on it, but the nearest man has a monobrow.

I can't trust him with my Mac if he can't be trusted with tweezers. I've been blagging a comfy chair and free Wi-Fi for a few hours, I've even indulged in a little snooze; it's too cheeky to ask the staff to watch my stuff.

My laptop will just have to come with me. Dettol. That's what I think of when I step into the toilets clutching my laptop. I probably can't bleach my keyboard without doing serious damage, but I could Dettol it.

If I'd been sensible I'd have brought my bag in and sat it inside.

Now I'm looking at the suspiciously wet floor and thinking: germs. I balance it on the baby change unit.

Taking your laptop to the bathroom is not ideal, but on the plus side, if there's no toilet roll you can send an emergency email for supplies.

Deirdre enjoys the height of good fortune

City Airport deal helps Irish high jumper prepare for Olympics

Rob Virtue
@wharf.co.uk

Juggling a gruelling training schedule while working part-time as a management consultant would be far from ideal preparation for the upcoming Olympics.

But it's a scenario 29-year-old Deirdre Ryan, Ireland's female high jump record holder, was facing until London City Airport stepped in with a sponsorship package.

For an athlete whose performance in the World Championships last September – where she set the national record while qualifying for this summer's Games – saw her widely acclaimed in her homeland, that would have been travesty.

While details of the City Airport deal have not been released Deirdre said it was "considerable enough" that along with 20,000 euro funding from the Irish Sports Council, she would be able to focus her attention totally on London 2012.

"It funds my training and travelling which is really quite expensive. It's a great opporfinancial services in Dublin before heading to Leverkusen in Germany for training where she joined a management consultancy, the sponsorship deal marked the end of a roller-coaster year.

It saw her tear ligaments in both ankles in separate incidents, missing around four months before returning stronger to set the Irish record in the championships in Korea.

Now her focus is on day-to-day training with the Games lingering on the horizon. Thinking ahead she said she would love to make the final of the high jump.

"It's hard to set a position target as you don't know who will be in what shape at that time," she said. "I just want to get a personal best. My aim is to get to the final and once you are there anything can happen.

"Those back home are so excited and there's lots of friends and family coming over for the Games.

"My parents said to me they will definitely have to fly to London City now."

Tributes to CWG's voice of the Island

HE was the man who made sure the Isle of Dogs' voice was never forgotten throughout its transition into a global business centre.

Peter Wade went from working at the docks to being a caretaker on the Wharf construction site and then a key figure within management at Canary Wharf Group.

He died at the end of February.

Peter was originally against the development of the estate, even staging a mock funeral marking the death of the docks. But later he became head of community relations at the company.

CWG's chairman and chief executive Sir George Iacobescu said: "It was a very difficult and controversial decision for him to move from a community activist role to working for a developer, yet throughout his many years of service to Canary Wharf, he never compromised his belief that the regeneration of the Docklands should provide direct benefits to local people.

"He was just as strong an advocate for the community within the company as he was an advocate for our company in the community."

Father-of-four Peter, who was 71 when he died following a short illness, was key in setting up community projects such as the Local Business Liaison Office, the Sports and Community

Programme and the Schools Programme.

He was also instrumental in pushing river transport links.

He retired from his role at CWG five years ago but carried on offering advice to the firm as a consultant.

Cllr Gloria Thienel said: "Peter was very much a community man. He fought for the Island and for its identity not to be lost in the development and became the voice for the community within Canary Wharf. He will be sadly missed by his Island friends and by his family."

THE BIG INTERVIEW

Giles Broadbent talks to Mayor of London Boris Johnson about the future of the Docklands

■ The Wharf spoke to the Mayor of London Boris Johnson high in the Citigroup building, overlooking The O2, Royal Docks and the Thames.

GB: I'm just enjoying this magnificent view.

BJ: It's one of the great views in the city. We're looking at the future. This is going to be the area where London is going to take off. Someone said to me that in 500 years' time, downtown London will be in Barking.

Can we talk about the prospect of the Royal Docks becoming a hi-tech cluster because that is a fascinating project.

We can see the Siemens pavilion, we've played a role in getting that, you can see the cable car going across from the pavilion to The O2 and by the looks of it they're making great progress.

And we can see the brownfield sites as well.

You can see massive potential. You can see Silvertown, you can see the logic of people moving there and setting up business. And that is going to be transformational. And you know about the bidding process that's going on [for the Silvertown Quays] – the three bidders and where we are with that. We just need a bit more time to look at these proposals.

What can you do as mayor to make these things happen? What can you do to persuade private capital to join the project?

With Silvertown, in a short space of time we put the land together and we opened a bidding process and since then there's been feverish activity. It's now down to three – very serious and credible – bidders

There are some amazing schemes – very different schemes but each with its own selling point. It's going to be hard to make a decision but what it shows is the confidence in the area and the absolute conviction that developers have that this is going to be a place to invest in.

Just think what a difference there's been. We're looking at an area of this city's and this country's most tragic industrial demise.

This was once the heart of the empire, those docks were built by the Victorians, colossal sea trenches, because the original London docks became too small and then in the '60s those docks too became too small and London lost shipping and population as all the attendant industries died away.

You're now seeing a rebirth with different sorts of employment, with high technology, with the opportunity for green jobs and hotels, retail, all sorts of stuff and a real conviction on the part of business that it's going to be an attractive place to live.

My job is to create the environment where that can happen.

How much is grind and how much is vision?

It's a bit of both. You have to have the idea in the first place and then you have to engage with the process, which can be exhausting. I mean, we got £36million out of Emirates to fund

Can I rundown a checklist of transport projects and where we are with them? Are we done with the DLR now?

No. I think the DLR has got massive potential. Could you take the DLR to Bromley? Why not? Hook up that part of London, give another feed in to the City, to east London from Bromley. I think it would be very popular if we could do that.

Look at the figures of revenue costs for various modes of transport. The DLR covers 150 per cent of its revenue cost. Once you've built it, it pays for its revenue costs.

I think the Croydon tramlink just about breaks even, the Tube is 85 per cent, buses are 60 per cent. In other words buses require huge amounts of subsidy, the Tube, though its getting better, still needs a lot of subsidy. Every DLR train that's full pays back to TfL. What's not to like?

Another area of interest is the Thames as a viable east-west route.

The London Assembly was critical of the River Concordat and the progress on Thames saying no-one at TfL was taking ownership of it. Again, is that something you can make happen?

I think that's unfair. Since the River Concordat, we've had a big increase in passengers very substantially. And we put the Oyster on the Clippers and, particularly during the Olympics, we're going to see a big increase.

What I can't pretend to your readers is that I truthfully see it as a highway that is going to be as successful as a terrestrial highway.

The London Assembly is saying "Boris has thrown his weight behind Boris bikes, obviously, and they're a minor means of transport. The river is another minor means of transport so why hasn't he thrown his weight behind the river?"

Well I have. I have. There's been a big increase in river transport and we want to see a bigger increase over the next four years and we'll have an ambitious programme of increasing

What's the story of the Docklands?

"You're now seeing a rebirth with different sorts of employment and a real conviction on the part of business that it's going to be an attractive place to live."

Boris Johnson

the cable car and I think it's going to be good deal for London and a brilliant deal for Emirates, a massive visitor attraction on the London skyline and I think that is worth £36million.

It does link up the Royal Docks – which can be windswept and lonely – to The O2.

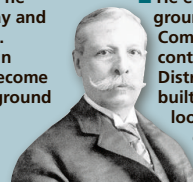

The biggest live music venue in the world. That's why the Jubilee line upgrade is so important, that connectivity is vital for this part of London. But there is more to be done.

CHARLES YERKES

■ Philadelphian Quaker Charles Yerkes, born 1837, moved to Chicago in 1883 where he developed the tramway and suburban rail systems.
■ He came to London in 1900 and decided to become involved in the Underground after riding along the route of one proposed line and surveying the city from the summit of Hampstead Heath.

■ He established the Underground Electric Railways Company of London to take control of the Metropolitan District Railway and the part-built Baker Street and Waterloo Railway and a number of other private railway companies.

'Always a balance'

river use during my next term as mayor if I get back in.

Next one. River crossings? Where are you with that? Is there funding in place or is that still to be decided?

We're pressing ahead with the consultations on Silvertown - Blackwall Two. It will be a fantastic scheme.

It will relieve congestion at Blackwall. It's sensible because it hooks up with existing transport arteries and, again, you're plugged straight into that part of London. I think it will be popular and successful. And then we're introducing a crossing at Gallions Reach for ferry traffic and a new crossing at Dartford. A lot of progress.

Is it that you're putting in place these links in anticipation of the growth of this area?

These industries will be there. Look at what the Victorians did, always remember what people like Yerkes saw.

Yerkes went to the top of Hampstead Heath and he looked out and he saw this huge expanse of parkland and forest and he thought 'there can be houses here but there can only be houses here if I built an electric railway' and he did.

History shows that it generally is a private venture that starts and goes bust and the state has to step in but in the end it is the transport infrastructure going first that makes the difference. Without the transport, you're nowhere.

In 10 years' time Canary Wharf will be doubled in size, Wood Wharf would be thriving. Do you anticipate people being able to get here and home again using this mosaic of transport options?

Absolutely. The area is going to change. And the important thing is that the area is going to bring benefits to some of the local people who haven't seen them yet.

Four years ago one of the strongest complaints I heard was that Canary Wharf was an island of prosperity in a sea of deprivation and that can't be right. I think that is changing.

These things can take generations.

Look at what's happening to Hackney. It will happen here too. But you have got to do these things sensitively and mindfully.

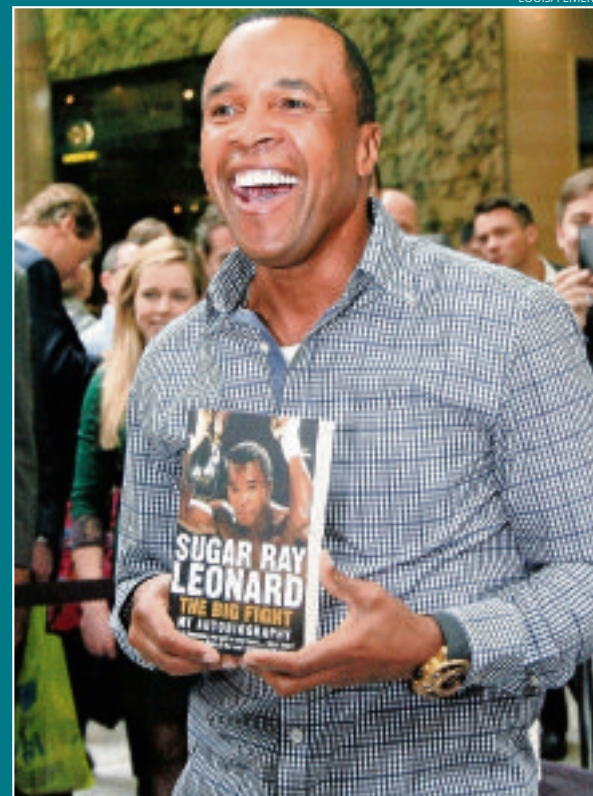

When I look at some of these planning applications you have to do things in a way that takes account of the historic communities and the way of life as well. There's a balance to be struck. All the way up the Lea there are sites being developed, from the Isle of Dogs through Canning Town to Stratford and we're putting in the transport that can make it happen.

London is moving east.

City status failure

TOWER Hamlets has failed in its bid for City status.

The borough was beaten by Chelmsford, Perth and St Asaph who have been awarded the Queen's Diamond Jubilee civic honour.

The borough's bid was backed by Canary Wharf Group and a number of businesses in the area.

Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg said: "The standard of application was very high and those who missed out should not be downhearted. I hope the competition has given the residents of all the places which applied a sense of civic pride, of collective ownership."

Partners sign up

NEWHAM Council and Bouygues Development have moved a step closer to realising the agreed terms of their Principal Development Agreement (PDA) for the £600million Canning Town Centre scheme.

The PDA was unveiled at MIPIM, a major development expo in Cannes last week. The deal, with Bouygues Development and partner One Housing Group, will form part of Newham's £3.7billion Canning Town and Custom House Regeneration Programme.

The six hectare site will reconnect the areas north and south of the A13 flyover with homes and shops.

Mayor of London Boris Johnson rides into Roman Road Market to launch the expansion

Boris rides in to launch bike hire scheme in east

But critics say he lacks ambition in pushing cycles as the way ahead

Louisa Emery
@wharf.co.uk

Boris Johnson rode into Tower Hamlets to launch the east London extension of his cycle hire scheme.

The Mayor of London was greeted with cheers and heckles as he cycled to the site of one of the new docking stations at Roman Road Market in Bow on Thursday.

He said: "This is a fantastic scheme for London, it creates jobs and helps the economy. Tower Hamlets Council has joined the party with a contribution of £2million and this is a wise decision as it will be a real benefit to the neighbourhood."

The expansion means the scheme now covers 65sq km of the capital with 2,300 additional bikes and 4,800 more docking stations.

Areas added include Canary Wharf, Isle of Dogs, Wapping, Poplar, Stepney Green, Mile End and Bow.

Mr Johnson said: "Now there is a huge opportunity to expand south of the river, all we need is more money from Barclays on top of the £50million they have already given us."

Members of the London Assembly have pledged their support for the scheme but have highlighted concerns.

London Assembly member and Green party mayoral candidate Jenny Jones said: "This is great news for east London but I am concerned at the mayor's lack of ambition. Londoners won't be able to cycle to the Olympic Park and they will only have a third of the bikes available compared to their Parisian counterparts."

"If the mayor is serious about scheme fun and attractive for a wider range of people.

"Instead of every bike looking as if it is the property of Barclays Bank let's get some limited edition bikes to celebrate some incredible events taking place in London."

"A decade ago we had 50 London buses painted gold to mark the Queen's Golden Jubilee so why not have some new bikes to mark this year's Diamond Jubilee?"

Concerns surrounding Barclays' sponsorship of the scheme have been raised by London Assembly member John Biggs.

Mr Biggs said: "So far Transport for London seems to have taken an ad hoc approach to sponsorship, which could expose it to unnecessary risk if a sponsor suffered serious reputational damage."

"TfL has acknowledged the need for a new single policy on sponsorship but it must also take a more consistent and transparent approach so Londoners can be sure any future deals are in the best interests of the capital."

Mr Johnson said: "Some people are always going to be opposed to the idea but I am confident we can do a first class job."

"Our wonderful blue bikes have changed the face of London and introduced a new form of public transport that has eased getting around our great city for thousands of Londoners and made the capital even more attractive to visitors."

Boris joins the chain gang his target of a million extra journeys made by bike every day, then a bike hire scheme which only generates an extra 40,000 journeys a day is well short of what London needs."

Leader of the Liberal Democrat London Assembly Group Caroline Pidgeon said: "We need to improve and expand the scheme, get new bikes on our roads and make our roads much safer – but most importantly we must make the

Our protest over Cube will go on

Rob.Virtue
@wharf.co.uk

CAMPAIGNERS against plans for a development in Virginia Quay have vowed to continue their protests despite changes to the proposal.

Last month, London Thames Gateway Development Corporation's planning committee deferred the decision in order to seek legal advice on whether it has grounds to refuse the 12-storey application by Cube Developments containing 26 homes.

That saw the applicant make amendments to the plans, which have met with opposition from both the community in Poplar and from Tower Hamlets Council.

Among the changes are for six one-bedroom flats to be adapted to three two-bed apartments. There have also been alterations proposed to the access of the building.

Campaigners are against the proposal in principle and are planning to continue their opposition.

Councillor Peter Golds said both he and fellow Tower Hamlets representative Gloria Thienel will be at the LTGDC meeting in April and are also planning to express their disapproval in the consultation.

W What's wrong with the plan?

"This puts pressure on schools as well as medical and transport facilities."

Cllr Peter Golds

"It's yet more development in an area that's overdeveloped," said Cllr Golds. "This puts pressure on schools, as well as medical and transport facilities. The DLR is packed to bursting point."

Last December Tower Hamlets Council's development committee voted unanimously to support the community's opposition to the application.

Meanwhile, at last week's planning meeting of the LTGDC, the proposals for Minoco Wharf were approved.

London Mayor Boris Johnson now has two weeks to make a final decision on the huge scheme in the Royal Docks. The 266,500sq m proposal includes 3,000 homes ranging from studio flats to town houses and also has shops, restaurants and office space.

Health

Hospital gets new £1.4m CT scanner

2 NEWHAM Hospital is to get £1.4million for a new CT scanner as part of a nationwide funding boost for new equipment.

More than £330million will be spent on "state of the art" NHS equipment and buildings, Prime Minister David Cameron announced.

Health Secretary Andrew Lansley explained that money saved in central capital budgets means government is able to spend on improving NHS facilities.

"This will mean that more patients in Newham will benefit from the latest world class equipment," he said.

Event

Bugsy Malone will come alive

3 HISTORIC Limehouse venue The Troxy is to be transformed into prohibition era Chicago for a series of showings of cult classic Bugsy Malone.

Organiser Future Cinema wants to encourage Tower Hamlets residents to come along to any one of more than 30 performances and is offering a "pay what you can" option.

The film, which stars a young Jodie Foster, tells the story of a group of gangsters all played by children, firing splurge instead of bullets.

Running from March 16 to April 14 the event will feature child friendly entertainment during matinees. Go to ticketline.co.uk.

Olympics

Venues will cope in a drought, says EA

4 THE Olympic venues will be able to cope in a drought, the Environment Agency has said.

The venues have a "high level of resilience", says the EA, which has been working with the Olympic Delivery Authority since 2007.

The announcement came as drought measures – including hosepipe bans – were introduced across the south east.

A supply network for non-drinking or non-potable water has been installed across the Olympic Park to cover events, irrigation and cleaning as part of a drive towards sustainable sources.

The EA said: "For most venues potable water is the backup supply and in some cases borehole supply can be used."

"In [some] cases we could be asked to allow water to be supplied from the River Lea."

Court

Brother charged with torso murder

5 THE brother of a former EastEnders actress appeared in the dock on Monday accused of murdering his sister and dumping her torso in a canal in Bethnal Green.

Gemma McCluskie's headless and limbless body was discovered floating close to London's Broadway Market last week after she had attended a hospital event. Her 35-year-old brother Tony confirmed his name, his Hackney address and date of birth during a one-and-a-half minute appearance at Thames Magistrates' Court.

Man lured police to a gang beating

6 A MEMBER of gang which lured police to a fake call and set upon them has been jailed for three years.

Mushahid Ali, 23, of Back Church Lane in Shadwell was sentenced at Wood Green Crown Court last Wednesday.

Police were called to an address in Christian Street in December to a report of a domestic incident. By the time they realised the address was bogus, they were surrounded by youths who attacked them.

Ali was spotted fleeing the scene and was arrested, during the course of which he headbutted a Police Community Support Officer.

Youngsters honoured for values Diana championed

Louisa Emery
@wharf.co.uk

INSPIRATIONAL young people gathered at Barclays head office in Canary Wharf on Monday to be honoured for their contribution to society.

The Diana Awards, presented in memory of the late princess, is given to children who have made a difference to the lives of others.

Diana Award CEO Maggie Turner said: "The award was set up by the UK memorial committee at the time of Diana's death and I think this is the one she would most like to be remembered by."

"The award is for children and young people who go that extra mile for the community without seeking any recognition or award for themselves."

"Children are nominated for volunteering, fundraising, acting as mentors for anti bullying campaigns and for supporting friends or family going through a challenging time."

The Scottish teenager has raised £750,000 for a charity set up in memory of her twin brother Calum. Calum's Cabin offers respite for families with children suffering from terminal illness.

She said: "I am really honoured to receive the Diana Award. I take great pleasure in being able to give children and families the quality time they so desperately need and I know my brother would be thrilled so many people have benefited from his cabin."

The award has five categories open to individuals or groups aged between none and 18.

Maggie said: "Young people are nominated by teachers, social workers, churches and youth leaders."

"We have are giving out 75 awards today and, on average, personally hand out 300 a year although we would like to be able to give every child an award."

International rugby player Ben Cohen presented the certificates. Now retired from the sport, he is the chairman of the Ben Cohen Standup Foundation which tackles bullying and homophobia in sport.

He said: "I am delighted to present the Diana Award to inspirational young people who are committed to making the world a kinder and better place."

"I am passionate about standing up to bullying and erasing homophobia from sport and it is wonderful to see that the Diana Anti-Bullying Award recognises the young people who are also dedicated to this cause."

Gun-carrying drug dealer behind bars

A DRUG dealer who was found with 49 wraps of heroin and a shotgun has been jailed for 10 years.

Officers stopped Jeffrey Anamo, 21, of Hameway in East Ham, while he was carrying the loaded gun and body armour in Woolwich Manor Way, Beckton.

A search of his home found the wraps of heroin. Police say the gun was likely to be used to commit gang-related crimes.

Anamo pleaded guilty to possession of a firearm and the drugs, with intent to supply, and was sentenced at Inner London Crown Court last Tuesday.

Council

Shamed councillor loses her position

TOWER Hamlets Council has confirmed disgraced councillor Shelina Akhtar will lose her position after she was jailed for benefit fraud.

The independent who had a seat in the Spitalfields and Banglatown ward was sentenced to three and a half months in prison after claiming housing and tax benefits at time same as she sublet her flat. A by-election will be held.

City firms go for glory

CITY financial firm Ernst & Young is calling on the experience of former World Squash No.2 Peter Marshall to help book a place in the final of the Canary Wharf & Square Mile Corporate Challenge.

The challenge acts as a side event to the showpiece Squash classic featuring many of the world's top players.

More than 60 City workers have been battling it out for the place in the final, which takes place on the glass show court, during the week of the World Tour event.

Ernst & Young will face the Financial Services Authority (FSA) in the semi-final round, joining Credit Suisse and accountancy firm Price-waterhouseCoopers to make up the final four in the competition with the grand final on Friday, March 23.

Left-hander says he wants to show City pals what he can do

Rob.Virtue

Adrian Grant is looking to upset the squash world's top 10 when he takes to the court in Canary Wharf's annual tournament.

The 31-year-old left-hander from Greenwich, ranked 15 in the world, will have his work cut out against the likes of the number one James Willstrop, top seed and last year's winner Nick Matthew, and a host of emerging Egyptian talents.

But Grant, who kicks off with a first round tie against a qualifier – yet to be decided – is confident of going all the way.

"I've been playing well recently so my aim is to get to the final," said Grant. "I'm not here to make up the numbers, I'm here to prove a point."

"I don't care who else is in the final. I'm just determined to get there and pick up a trophy. In squash anything can happen. Major upsets often take place in the first round. That's what makes these tournaments so exciting."

Grant last performed at the Canary Wharf Squash Classic four years ago, opting for overseas tournaments in recent years.

However, he's been tempted back by the prospect of appearing in front of friends and taking on the world's best.

"I've had a bit of hassle from friends who work in the City saying they want to see me but it's also fantastic to play in this event because it's not often you get so many of the world's top sportsmen in one area – and just 10 minutes from where I live."

James Willstrop returns to the tournament as the world No.1

Young hopeful Joe Lee enters this year's tournament as the only wildcard and faces a tough first round tie against fourth seed Mohamed El Shorbagy of Egypt.

Lee, 22, who first watched the tournament when he was 15, said: "If I were to beat him it would be the biggest win of my career so far. I would be over the moon. I want to put in a good performance and show I can perform on this kind of stage."

The Canary Wharf Squash Classic runs from March 19-23.

Go to cwsquash.com for more information.

ONES TO WATCH

■ James Willstrop returns to the tournament as the world number one for the first time in his career. He aims to take home his fourth title at East Wintergarden.

■ He took over top spot from his great rival and the reigning Canary Wharf champ Nick Matthew.

■ Other strong British players at the top of the drawer are Daryl Selby, Adrian Grant and Peter Barker who was a finalist last year.

■ But the Brits are up against a quartet of strong Egyptians: Mohamed El Shorbagy, his younger brother Marwan, Tarek Momen and Ali Anwar Reda.

■ The international contingent also sees the German number one Simon Rosner and top Indian player Saurav Ghosal.

City Hall clash over breakdown of sales figures

Rob Virtue
@wharf.co.uk

Olympic organiser Locog was accused of being "obsessed with secrecy" at a heated debate at City Hall last week.

The group's chairman Lord Sebastian Coe and chief executive Paul Deighton appeared in front of assembly members to give an update on the progress in preparing for 2012. They were attacked by Baroness Dee Doocey who slammed the pair for refusing to give a breakdown on the prices of the seven million tickets already sold.

"In 2011 you said you couldn't give the information because of data protection but we didn't want details of people who bought them," said Baroness Doocey, who chairs the City Hall committee, which scrutinises Games progress.

W What was said to Locog?

"What are you trying to hide? Why can't we get the information?"
Baroness Doocey

"Then you said it was down to client confidentiality but we didn't want the details of sponsors."

"What are you trying to hide? Why can't we get the information?"

After the duo said they could not provide a breakdown on the tickets but insisted overall there would be 2.5million tickets sold at £20 or under, Baroness Doocey responded:

"Why can't you give us a breakdown of the seven million tickets sold with a note saying this is not the final figure?"

"You're obsessed with secrecy and I don't understand why."

Lord Coe replied: "I'm not going to divert the attention of my team who still have four million tickets to sell and revenue targets to meet because that is how we fund the Games. I'm not going to take them off that focus to work on every single client group for every single session."

Assembly member John Biggs was also dissatisfied with a response to his question asking whether just 36 per cent of 100 metres final tickets were for sale to the public.

Mr Deighton said this was closer to 50 per cent when press tickets, seats not being sold due to being blocked by big screens, and those with views obstructed by cameras were taken out.

Meanwhile, both Mr Deighton and Lord Coe said they had not seen the Dispatches TV documentary which was critical of some areas of the ticket sales process.

£1,000 on Nandos? It's time for better budget

THE IDCF charity, which aims to relieve poverty in Tower Hamlets, has handed out two grants to help residents manage their money better.

Grants of £17,000 and £10,000 have been awarded to the Shoreditch-based financial and enterprise education charity MyBnk and Tower Hamlets Citizens Advice Bureau to run money management and business workshops.

From the girl who was shocked to discover she spent over £1,000 on Nandos a year, to the boy who just wants to emulate his parents, MyBnk helped 20 young people from across Poplar and Bow understand how money affects their decisions.

Shahina, 17, said: "I had hardly a clue about banking and borrowing before this, I found it very useful."

As well as money lessons, MyBnk will also create real life social entrepreneurs in enterprise challenges using real money and in real marketplaces.

Tower Hamlets Citizens Advice Bureau is delivering information sessions at community venues across Bow, Poplar and the Isle of Dogs from Easter.

IDCF director Tracey Betts said: "By working with other funders, IDCF has been able to pool funds along with its own to offer a programme of practical support."

Jay Z heads to Hackney for free gig

RAP star Jay Z is to headline BBC Radio One's free Hackney Weekend 2012.

Jay Z, married to Beyonce and recently a new dad to daughter Blue Ivy, joins Tinie Tempah, Jessie J, Ed Sheeran and Leona Lewis on the bill.

The headliner for the second night of the June 23-24 event is still to be announced.

The station is giving away 100,000 tickets and aims to do more than just stage a concert and move on.

Event director Jason Carter told The Wharf at the recent unveiling of the BBC's Olympic input that workshops would be held to encourage East End youngsters to learn more about the music business and the site of the concert would be dressed by young local artists.

Revealing the name of the headline act, he said: "Our goal was to deliver the most ambitious and exciting event in Radio One's history and with the artists already announced I think we've achieved that, but to now add the world's biggest hip hop icon, Jay-Z, to the line-up, is fantastic news."

The Boardwalk Drifters

Boisdale Canary Wharf

If you get misty eyed at the sound of soulful tunes such as Saturday Night At The Movies, Come On Over To My Place and Under The Boardwalk then book in for a night at Boisdale this Saturday.

One of last year's most popular acts, The Boardwalk Drifters, are returning to the Cabot Place. The foursome's tribute to the R&B band emanating from New York City is one of the most impressive on the circuit.

It won't just be Drifters hits that get an airing – the Wharf crowd will be treated to a host of other material.

Sir Anthony Caro

Jubilee Park

An influential sculptor who began his career as an assistant to Henry Moore is showing a collection of work in Jubilee Park this spring.

Sir Anthony Caro is known for his large abstract structures, which were a radical departure when he exhibited them at his career defining Whitechapel Gallery show in 1963. Fifty years later he continues to produce innovative work. Made in his signature style, the collection in Canary Wharf is made of steel – rusted and varnished – reflecting the structures that make up the estate.

INTERVIEW

Gilbert and George tell us why they've been stealing east London bill posters

Louisa Emery
@wharf.co.uk

Whitechapel's most enigmatic artistic duo were at the White Cube in Bermondsey last week to launch their new show London Pictures.

Gilbert and George, whose daily walk takes in streets well trodden since Dickensian times, spoke about the motives behind their largest ever series of work and gave tips on distraction theft to make Fagin proud.

Newspaper bill posters relieved from outside newsagents reporting on London life form the basis of their latest creation.

George said: "At first we thought we would ask the shopkeepers to keep last week's posters for us but they became very suspicious so we had to steal them."

"When we are out walking arm in arm together one goes into the shop to buy some chewing gum and the other removes the poster."

"We were actually caught by an over enthusiastic policeman but I told him we were doing a project at my school about anti-social behaviour – I set myself up as a teacher."

Over six years the pair amassed a collection of 3,712 posters and it wasn't until they put them all together that they realised what they had.

George said: "When we laid them all out on the studio floor we

Looking through their magic eyes

were overwhelmed, almost sickened that we have all allowed the world to become what it is. These posters have two purposes – to sell newspapers but also the reality. It's a heavy price to pay for freedom.

"There are countries where these words wouldn't be allowed on posters."

The duo said

what struck them most was their ephemeral nature – one day big news and the next forgotten.

Gilbert said: "We realised the biggest subject was murder, then money then sex. We started seeing extraordinary stuff that we would never be able to address in our work otherwise."

London Pictures contains 292 pictures, 72 of which are being shown across White Cube's three London galleries following the show's premiere in Hong Kong.

Gilbert said: "We believe we are forming life and that the world will be a little bit different because we have made these pictures. We are always looking for the moral dimension – when we took pictures of lace curtains we realised they are the house burka."

George said: "Having this exhibition in 2012 was an accident. Looking at it you can see why we weren't asked to do an Olympic poster."

Gilbert said: "We don't believe in the Games. We don't believe in the best. We close ourselves off and make our own vision. Artists have magic eyes."

The exhibition is free to attend and the duo specified how it was to be marketed. They said they wanted everyone to be able to come and see it but weren't planning on taking the works out of the gallery space.

George said: "You wouldn't get more people reading books if you put them out on the pavement. People have to make the conscious decision to come in. One day there will be a last Gilbert and George picture but we are optimistic. These pictures are celebrating life."

Children get a taste of festival to come

GREENWICH Theatre is joining forces with Greenwich and Lewisham Young People's Theatre to bring a children's drama festival to the borough.

Greenwich Children's Theatre Festival will take place in various venues from the end of the month and 350 school children have already been given a taste of what to expect when a touring company dropped into the town last week.

Forest Forge performed The Phoenix And The Carpet, based on E Nesbit's classic tale at Greenwich Theatre.

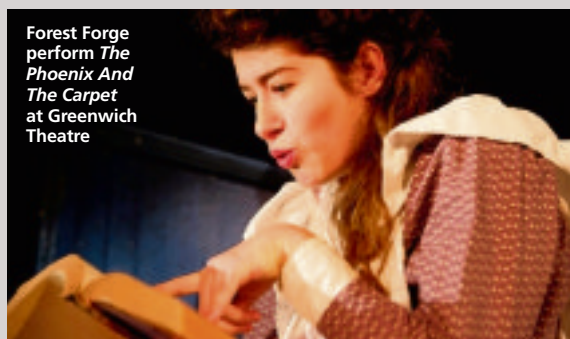

It tells the story of four children who are whisked off on fantastic adventures after discovering a glowing golden egg containing the phoenix.

Greenwich Theatre director James Haddrell said: "There is something magical about transporting a theatre full of children off on an adventure which they can share, and talk about afterwards."

"Lots of the children had never been to see a live performance like this before, and introducing them to the wonders of live theatre is part of what Greenwich Theatre exists for." Greenwich Children's Theatre Festival, various venues, Mar 31-April 14, greenwichtheatre.org.uk.

Line-up for O2 Sundance

FESTIVAL

Giles Broadbent
g@wharf.co.uk

Organisers of Sundance London, the film and music festival heading for The O2 at the end of April, have unveiled a 14-strong line-up of feature films that will make their UK premieres.

The narrative and documentary flicks were first shown in January at the 2012 Sundance Film Festival in Park City, Utah under the auspices of Sundance Institute founder Robert Redford.

He said: "I welcome the opportunity to see how people in the UK experience these films."

"While they are American productions they speak to universal experiences and global challenges."

He added: "Sundance London also is the perfect opportunity to continue our long-time commitment to growing a broader international community around new voices and new perspectives."

Director of the Sundance Film Festival John Cooper said: "Sundance

London grew out of our desire to help American independent filmmakers expand their reach, and we are happy that these 14 filmmakers are joining us on this adventure.

"Their participation has helped us to not only create a programme for Sundance London that reflects the diversity of our film festival in Park City, but also that helps build an enduring legacy of American stories that speak to international audiences."

Alex Hill, chief finance and strategy officer of AEG Europe, owners of host venue The O2, said: "All at The O2 are very excited that the inaugural Sundance London film and music festival is nearly upon us."

"The 14 films which Sundance Institute is bringing to London reflect the strength, depth and breadth of American independent cinema that showcased earlier in the year at the Sundance Film Festival."

"They complement an exciting music component with performances from Tricky and Placebo, and our opening night event An Evening With Robert Redford and T Bone Burnett."

Also on offer to Sundance London audiences will be opportunities to attend panels and hear guest speakers talk about the part they play in making films, documentaries and the role of music in modern cinema.

Forthcoming announcements include the festival's short film programme, special events and additional music performers.

Go to sundance-london.com. Tickets will be on sale in early April and the festival itself takes place April 26-29.

Junkyard wars as Farraday puts his big plan into gear

SCREEN*Contraband

(15) 110mins

So we start with the little brother messing up his drug smuggling gig, dumping his candy into the sea and getting himself into hock with some very angry bad guys.

Big bro (in-law) Chris Farraday (Mark Wahlberg) has left the smuggling game behind to go legit with wife Kate (Kate Beckinsale) and his two boys.

But little bro Andy (Caleb Landry Jones) faces retribution from wildman Tim Briggs (Giovanni Ribisi) unless he makes up the loss.

Chris, who never lightly gave up smuggling, agrees to step in and do one last mega-job.

"You gotta do what you gotta do," says his dad. "Family is family."

See what it is yet? That's right. Gone In 60 Seconds only with container ships instead of Ferraris.

That's where we're heading with this re-imagining of the Icelandic mini-hit Reykjavik-Rotterdam.

But something happens along the way, not particularly noticeable amid the brutal swarfga-pumping action (set to a blistering New Orleans soundtrack).

Those European roots begin to show and the sensibilities of director Baltasar Kormakur take over. Where Hollywood would head right, towards a bit of stylish but stay-inside-the-lines action, Balt goes left.

Forget Gone In 60 Seconds, he has Heat in his sights with its epic, sweeping, intrusive crime-scape – and perhaps a touch of The Italian Job for its convoluted caper feel.

Chris Farraday (Mark Wahlberg) checks over his counterfeit notes

Wahlberg's Farraday heads down to Panama City on a container ship to pick up some "funny money" but the deals goes south too.

Deranged gangster Gonzalo (Diego Luna) is right in the middle of his own LA-style takedown and the impudent trio of Farraday, pal Danny (Lukas Haas) and shaky Andy are a fatal distraction.

Back home in New Orleans, the pressure's rising. Briggs is under the cosh too from a Mr Bigger so he's turning his attention on the fragile and fragrant – but oh so real – Kate. Farraday's pal Sebastian (Ben Foster) is on guard duty but he's early days on a 12-step.

It's a race against time, multiple obstacles, many enemies and some wild improbabilities.

Wahlberg plays the humble, blue collar Everyman with his usual subdued charm and Balt keeps the camera swirling inside plenty of big metal places like this is a Channel Five documentary on Mega-somethings. (Director of photography is Barry Ackroyd, who made United 93 and The Hurt Locker look so authentic).

The film doesn't match Balt's ambitions for it and there is a degree of convolution to make everything work but the brutal action is on an industrial scale and any resemblance to any easy-on-the-eye Hollywood slick-fests is purely coincidental.

Giles Broadbent*Our verdict

Ambitious crime epic makes container ships look sexy.

SCREEN*We Bought A Zoo

(PG) 124mins

Feel-good director Cameron Crowe dramatises a story based on the experiences of Benjamin Mee who bought a dilapidated zoo and set about reviving its fortunes.

The real zoo was the Dartmoor Zoological Park but the action has been transferred to California and Mee is played by Matt Damon, a widower with two children who react in different ways to his plan.

Scarlett Johansson plays the zookeeper – and love interest.

SCREEN*21 Jump Street

(15) 109mins

The pairing of Jonah Hill and Channing Tatum is unlikely and that is the joke behind this buzzy action comedy which sees the youthful looking duo join up to the force and to go undercover in a local high school.

Schmidt (Hill) and Jenko (Tatum) risk their lives to investigate a deadly drugs gang and neither of them expected to face the terror and anxiety of school life all over again.

SCREEN*The Devil Inside

(15) 83mins

A critical mauling awaited this outing which blends the hyperbolic and contorted action of exorcist movies with the modern penchant for "found footage true stories".

Some 20 years after Maria Rossi murdered three people, her daughter Isabella seeks to understand the truth about what happened that night. She recruits two young exorcists who use new methods that brings them face to face with pure evil.

Oxfam gift can help out other mums

Last week we celebrated International Women's Day and this week it is Mothering Sunday, both powerful reminders not just of the positive role that women play in today's society, but also of the road we still have to travel for women across the globe to gain equality and respect.

While protests such as the Arab Spring and the uprising in Syria have seen women on the front line of the demonstrations, too often once the dust settles they have been relegated to the background.

And as we celebrate the special mums in our lives it's worth remembering the impact that great women have had on the environmental movement.

Last year we sadly lost Wangari Maathai, the Kenyan environmentalist and Nobel Prize winner who founded the Green Belt Movement. The first African woman to receive the Nobel Prize changed the world.

Closer to home, women act

If you're thinking of a gift for your mum this weekend you could decide to honour the courage and bravery of women around the globe by choosing a gift that reflects the ongoing struggle for equality.

Shelling out for disgraced councillor

After two convictions for benefit fraud and an ongoing investigation for illegal subletting, Shelina Akhtar is no longer a Tower Hamlets councillor.

Her seat was declared vacant when she declined to appeal against her prison sentence.

However, she continued to be paid a council allowance while in Holloway. Spitalfields ward will now have the opportunity to elect a new councillor. However, the election will be held just before the mayoral election, thereby costing additional money. Perhaps our mayor and his supporters will explain the reason for this latest waste of our money, which would be saved if there were a combined poll?

■ It is safe to say that when a candidate has been in politics for four decades long forgotten speeches can come back to bite.

The London mayoral election has seen Labour's Ken Livingstone haunted by recent speeches as well as previous actions.

It may have impressed a certain audience to call for the vote to be withdrawn for those not paying full tax on all income. Unfortunately, if at the same time, you are funnelling a substantial income into a company to reduce your personal tax burden, which is exactly what Mr Livingstone has been doing, then it is difficult to avoid the label of hypocrite, which is how the New Statesman has described him.

That is the question

Much debate, north of the border, about the form of words that could set in train Scottish independence.

Commentators vary between the simple yes/no and one that suggests a kind of multiple choice.

Whatever the answer, conclude constitutional experts, simplicity will be key.

Which is why, I imagine, that Mayor of London Boris Johnson will not be invited onto any committee to find the appropriate question.

He laid out the question of the London mayoralty thus last week: "Do you want to go back to the high taxing, car hating, outer London borough ignoring, taxpayer funded Chateaufort Du Pape drinking, bendy-bus fetishism, of newt fancying, tax dodging former incumbent of City Hall or do you want to go forward with a sensible, moderate, Conservative administration of London that conserves what scarce resources we have and puts them to the benefit of the city by investing in transport infrastructure?"

And r-e-s-t.

■ By coincidence it was a weekend of sports docs – Senna, the uplifting profile of the racing driver and Fire In Babylon about the West Indies team of the early '80s.

They acted as a reminder that sport is one of the few mediums that work effectively as a metaphor for struggle, redemption, rebellion and risk.

Looking forward to London 2012: The Movie.

Whole world in his hands

■ Call me soppy, but this happened: I was on the DLR to work this week when a deluge of school children scampered on at East India, noisily filling seats on their way to South Kensington.

A boy, probably five, sat next to me and craned his neck round to take in the vista – houses, Orbit, Olympic Park, sprawl et al. He tapped me on the shoulder and invited me to look too, which I did.

"It's the whole world," he said, grinning broadly. "The whole world!"

What an adventure lay ahead of him, at the Natural History Museum most immediately and then filling all those wonderful days to come.

WORKING MUM

By Tabitha Ronson

Youngsters spellbound by the Bard

I was lucky enough to be the plus one of my boss at a special production of A Midsummer Night's Eve at the Globe Theatre on Thursday.

I won't go into details about how and why I was chosen but needless to say Young Colleague has been harrumphing in my ear, worming in my boss's, ever since.

The event was to celebrate the Playing Shakespeare with Deutsche Bank programme, a scheme that since its inception in 2007 has seen more than 50,000 students benefit from £1million of free tickets to a Shakespeare production at the Globe.

It was a night where the good and the great got to deservedly take a bow.

It's no mean feat getting 70 per cent of London secondary schools to engage with Shakespeare.

The production was a riot. A contemporary staging in the open-air Southwark playhouse

“Not a text, Tweet or Facebook to be heard” saw the sets of young lovers dressed in modern school uniforms, songs by Adele and Lady Gaga rocking out,

Puck whizzing around on a Micro scooter, and Titania, Queen of the Fairies, looking, and acting, like a cross between Florence And The Machine, and Jesse J.

For two hours, the primarily young audience was held spellbound, absorbed by the lyricism and drama of Shakespeare, savouring the communal experience of theatre.

There were wolf whistles when Lysander flexed his bare-chested pecs; "aaahs" when Hermia lost her pink foil helium balloon; and gasps of wonder when Puck disappeared into a small cabin-size suitcase.

A group of youths standing in the chilled London evening air, watching a comedy from another age, and not the tap-tap of a text, Tweet or Facebook to be heard – The Bard would have been proud.

Shakespeare made accessible, made relevant and, more importantly, made interesting to a new generation, one that, with so many distractions on hand, is so difficult to engage.

It was a joy to be in the Capital on Thursday to witness arguably the greatest writer in history still bringing down the house. Working mum hoping the Playing Shakespeare programme will still exist when Master A reaches secondary school.

St Patrick's Day

OPENING

Stuffed birds and spit roast beasts

★ The DLR functions as a major artery pumping humanity between London's financial kidneys on the Isle of Dogs (yes this is a thinly veiled reference to the FSA cleaning the blood of the City's finances) and its heart in the Square Mile.

Wharfers regularly find themselves washed up at the wrong end, casting about for the warmth of a pleasant environment amid the cold streets of Bank or Moorgate.

Fortunately, if you don't fancy the formality of their dining room in Chiswell Street, brothers Ed and Tom Martin have thoughtfully opened The Jugged Hare, a gastropub further up the road. As you might expect from the team behind The Gun, the interior is a blend of contemporary comfort and the glories of London's past.

Fine taxidermy dominates the bar, dining benches are padded with leather and contrast nicely with sleek stainless steel in the open kitchen.

Meat will be spit roasted on the imposing eight-skewer machine daily, while other dishes on the menu celebrate the best of fowl, fish and seasonal vegetables. There's even a Guinness sauce for the black pudding if you feel like popping over there on Saturday.

The venue also boasts a barrel-vaulted event space dubbed the wine room and the most delightful taps in London in its toilets.

History corner

★ First celebrated in 1783 at the instigation of the Irish Protestant organisation the Knights of St Patrick, this holiday's genesis has its roots in a British effort to focus ritual and celebration on a figure who appealed to both Roman Catholicism and the Anglican church.

St Patrick is perhaps most famous for supposedly driving the snakes from Ireland although his story is closely bound up with the arrival of Christianity in the country. He used the three-leaved shamrock to explain the Holy Trinity and allegedly carried a stick of ash that sprouted leaves when he embedded it in the ground while preaching.

His holiday is always held on March 17 and the first procession to mark it in Dublin was guarded mainly by Protestant volunteers.

Although still a religious celebration in Ireland, elsewhere St Patrick's Day has expanded to become an often secular celebration of Irish culture.

Those taking part typically wear green clothing and eat and drink Irish produce – the latter has its roots in the lifting of Lenten restrictions for the duration of the holiday.

RECIPE

Surf clam and wild garlic risotto

The weather has been very mild recently and spring seems to have come early, said head chef at The Gun Mark Fines. "One sign of this is the availability of wild garlic. This herb is related to the chive and has long green strands that are almost grass-like. It is well worth seeking out or going to pick your own. You can use it in salads but what I find brings out the best of it is when you are using it to flavour something like a stock or mashed potato or, in this case, risotto."

INGREDIENTS

40g butter, plus extra
1 shallot diced
1 shallot sliced
1 sprig of thyme
1 peeled clove of garlic, lightly crushed
200g Arborio rice
100ml white wine
500ml chicken stock, warm

Big handfuls of wild garlic, stalk removed, roughly chopped
50g butter unsalted
15g Parmesan grated
300g fresh surf clams
Fresh lemon
Olive oil

METHOD

If you buy your clams from a supermarket, they should be cleaned and ready to use. If you buy them from a fish market or local fishmonger however, they may need to be purged before you use them (See end of recipe).

To cook the risotto, first fry the sliced shallots, thyme and garlic until they start to soften without colouring and then add the clams and 50ml of the white wine.

Cover the pan and leave for five minutes for all the clams to steam open. Once they are all open, strain through a colander and set the clams aside. Keep the liquid aside and let it settle so that any remaining grit sinks to the bottom. Take half of the clams and remove the meat from the shells and set aside.

Heat the chicken stock in a saucepan and keep to one side. In another pan gently fry the diced shallot until soft with no colour then add the risotto rice to the pan.

Cook the rice gently for two minutes until it turns translucent then add the 50ml of white wine and the juice saved from the clams, being careful not to pour in any of the settled grit. Slowly add the stock one ladle at a time to the rice and cook it gently until the rice absorbs the liquid. Try not to stir the rice too much or the grains will become broken.

Clams and wild garlic in a risotto

Repeat the process until the rice is cooked to your liking. The classic recommendation is to leave a little bit of a bite to it but I often prefer mine to be cooked through.

To finish the risotto stir in the softened butter and grated Parmesan, then add the wild garlic and clam meat. If it becomes a bit stodgy and thick, add a little more stock.

Decorate the dish with the reserved clams in the shell (reheated in a little pan), some shaved Parmesan and a drizzle of olive oil.

PURGING CLAMS

To do this, first run cold water over the clams for 30 minutes, regularly shaking them up to dislodge any dirt or sand on the shells. Add a teaspoon of salt to the fresh water and leave to stand for 15 minutes. This will encourage the clams to open up and release any sand from within the shells.

After the 15 minutes, wash them again under running water for another 15 minutes to wash away the last of the sand.

Looking past the darkness to alternatives

★ While the majority of revellers will probably opt for a cool, creamy pint of Guinness (the whole event looks more and more like a marketing gimmick each year), there are other stouts if you're not concerned where your brew hails from:

SCOTCH CONNECTION
Innis & Gunn's offering, pictured, delivers more than a hint of the Emerald Isle, a Scottish stout aged in Irish whiskey barrels. That the two countries are most famous for brewing the exact mirror of its components does nothing to diminish this stout's delicious complexity. Irish Whiskey Cask, 7.4%, £3.99, innisandgunn.com.

Rimini, Italy

If Rimini, on the Italian Riviera, were to answer one of those teen magazine quizzes, her responses might go something like this:

Favourite movie: La Dolce Vita, directed by its famous son Federico Fellini.

Favourite pastime: Party.

Favourite colour: Pink.

Three of its favourite things come together once a year for La Notta Rosa – Pink Night – which this year arrives on July 1.

And it isn't just Rimini that gets in the party spirit, washing everything with pink ribbons, pink light and pink fizz. Some 110km of coastline joins in the fun, each town interpreting the theme in its own way but each focusing on shows, music, entertainments and ubiquitous happenings.

I went in 2011 and the first question to ask the locals presented itself without too much difficulty (or Italian). Why pink?

Pink, we were told, is the colour of welcome, of hospitality, of kindness and emotion. Creating a sense of belonging and community.

For a full 24 hours Rimini and its neighbours explore the opportunity for all of the above. Aside from the dazzling fireworks at midnight and the setpiece VIP gathering at Fellini's favourite Grand Hotel, the events appeared informal and organic.

On every street corner, a band (from brass to hip hop) and along the stretch of sand fairs, impromptu parties, plenty of drink and an intent to keep going for the full 24 hours.

We began our Notta Rosa at a reasonably gentle pace with a meal in the gorgeous Old Fishing Village. Adorning the walls of the homes were murals from Fellini's film and the cobbled streets were perfect for a spot of light meandering.

Some free time ahead of the pink-fest meant a return to some of the sites (for I have been here before as the gateway to the historic and breathtaking Emilia Romagna region).

The historic squares and churches of the town tell the tale of the influential Malatesta family who dominated during the middle ages who were rich in bloody history and attempted to atone for their ways through architecture.

But such things are for the head. La Notta Rosa is purely for the hedonist, and the heart.

Airport: Rimini.

Flight time: 2 hours.

Jersey, Channel Islands

Jersey is a curious and beguiling blend of different cultures. Most assuredly British but situated sufficiently close to France to possess some Gallic flair.

The island itself is small enough to be able to cater for traditional beach holidays and countryside holidays all within easy reach.

Indeed, much of the interior of Jersey – 45 square miles in all – is unspoilt and protected by stringent planning laws.

Open fields, woodlands, cliffs, trees and hedgerows provide the setting for extensive farmland, producing local crops that find themselves on menus of Michelin-starred restaurants nearby. Cycling is perhaps the best way to find the varied aspects of the island but organised tours and trips – for land as well as sea – are available. And not forgetting spa breaks for those “do nothing” specialists.

The main town is St Helier, one of the 12 parishes of Jersey, and has a population of around 28,000, a third of the island as a whole.

Jersey forms part of the Channel Islands which also include Guernsey, Alderney, Sark and Herm along with a number of uninhabited islets.

All are British Crown Dependencies and were the only part of the British Commonwealth to be occupied during the Second World War.

Blue Islands operates a direct service to the island from London City and says “we provide a completely honest and transparent pricing policy with no card charges, no baggage charges and free ticket charges” along with complimentary food and drink.

Airport: Jersey.

Flight time: 1 hour.

Zurich, Switzerland

■ The largest city in Switzerland is a major contemporary art and shopping destination linked with an excellent public transport and free bike-hire system.

Most of Zurich's sights are on either side of the Limmat river. The churches and houses of the old town are found here along with the most select shops on the famous Bahnhofstrasse.

The Kunsthaus – the Museum of Art – possesses a significant collection and the Swiss National Museum has artefacts telling the story of the region.

Marc Chagall's stained-glass windows in the Fraumünster amaze and, for night life, Zurich's 500 clubs and bars, pulse with life till the early hours.

Airport: Zurich.

Flight time: 2 hours.

Berlin, Germany

■ Although badly damaged in the final years of the Second World War and broken apart during the Cold War, Berlin has reconstructed itself greatly, especially with the reunification push after the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989.

Following the fragments of its role at the heart of the Eastern Bloc and now as a modern democratic capital makes for a fascinating journey.

But its history stretches further back with a few surviving medieval buildings near Alexanderplatz, which contrast with the ultra-modern structures of Potsdamer Platz.

The open-air Topography of Terror museums tells the story of the Nazi regime while life beyond the Iron Curtain is captured at the DDR museum.

Airport: Tegel, Schoenefeld.
Flight time: 2 hours.

Paris, France

■ Probably the most popular of the quick-getaway destinations, Paris possesses verve, magic and charm.

Located on the Seine and dotted with memorable landmarks, Paris is the perfect backdrop for a weekend of shopping, fine dining or sightseeing and is the most popular tourist destination in the world.

The City of Lights is, to a large extent, a Unesco World Heritage Site and has the second highest number of Michelin-starred restaurants (Tokyo has the most).

The numerous icons are part of popular culture around the world: The Eiffel Tower, the Arc de Triomphe, Notre-Dame cathedral, Moulin Rouge and the Lido.

High among the must-sees is the Louvre, an art museum which holds the most famous painting in the world – the Mona Lisa – and is considered the greatest collection of art in the world.

At 675,000 square feet, its size is immense and visitors can experience art from every civilisation on earth.

Slated to open this year, the 30,000 square foot Galerie Islam – topped by an undulating glass roof – will contain Europe's largest collection of art from the Islamic world.

For drifting, shopping and eating, the Champs Elysees is world renowned.

Brussels, Belgium

■ Brussels is a true melting pot – it is the home of the European Union and its institutions and stands at the "border" of the Germanic north and Latin south.

Visitors to Brussels will be lured by the product of this cosmopolitan and modern feel rather than the history and culture.

The old town was destroyed in the 19th century when the city became a capital and only a small historic centre was preserved.

Most famous of its landmarks is the Grand Place, a large ornate square surrounded by 300-year-old buildings and hosting events at night. Nearby is the famous Manneken Pis, pictured.

Airport: Brussels.
Flight time: 1 hour.

Florence, Italy

■ The beautiful and historic city of Florence is a bucket list favourite.

Artworks and buildings of breathtaking wonder appear around every corner in the jewel in the crown of the Renaissance.

Whether it is to view Michelangelo's David or gawp in wonder at the magnificent Duomo, the list of must-sees goes on.

The majesty of the Romanesque Baptistery, and Renaissance basilicas was an advertisement as much of the power and wealth of Florence's leading families as of the city's artistic prowess. Now shorn of its capital status, it has become the centre of the Tuscan lifestyle of simple food and nourishment for the senses.

Airport: Florence.
Flight time: 2 hours.

Dublin, Ireland

■ Dublin is a medieval city steeped in history and culture, yet it has become known for its youthful energy and party-capital status.

The city has 1,000 pubs and the Temple Bar area, south of the River Liffey, has become synonymous with the legendary "craic" of fireside singing, Guinness and good times, albeit a little overpriced.

A visit to the Guinness brewery tells the tale of the famous stout.

The city revels in its literary history – James Joyce's Ulysses – and has a rich cultural history. WB Yeats, George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde and Jonathan Swift worked here, while Trinity College holds The Book Of Kells.
Airport: Dublin.

Flight time: One hour.

The broad boulevard runs from the Place de la Concorde in the east, with its Obelisk Of Luxor, to Place Charles de Gaulle in the west, which is the location of the Arc de Triomphe.

This famous street offers cinemas, cafes, specialty shops and is considered "la plus belle avenue du monde".

The Eiffel tower may have been derided by the French on its arrival but it has become the city's most famous landmark.
Airport: Paris – Charles de Gaulle.
Flight time: 1.5 hours.

Madrid, Spain

■ The capital of Spain enjoys good weather for much of the year and is famous for its cultural and artistic heritage with the world-famous El Prado museum at its heart.

Madrid's royal history is a constant theme of the capital. The Spanish Empire was vast and sprawling and the status of kings required palaces and cathedrals of equal standing.

The climate dictates the daily life of Madrid with a siesta around midday for a couple of days and then plenty of nightlife when the sun goes down which sees the natives party until the early hours.

Clusters of ethnic groupings bring a cosmopolitan air – and cuisine.

Airport: Madrid Barajas.
Flight time: 2 hours.

Copenhagen, Denmark

■ Often overlooked as a destination because of its northern (ie, chilly) outlook, Copenhagen is something of a hidden gem.

The people are effortlessly kind and speak English better than we Brits.

The home of Hans Christian Andersen has plenty of stories to tell. The three most famous attractions in the city are:

The more than 100 year old amusement park Tivoli, the statue of The Little Mermaid, and the freetown of Christiansia.

With a history that dates back to 1043 the city is full of historic landmarks. Visitors should visit Amalienborg Palace, do a canal tour or shop on Strøget.

Airport: Copenhagen.
Flight time: 2 hours.

Edinburgh, Scotland

■ If austerity Britain is looking for a "staycation" this year, then Edinburgh might just squeeze into the parameters.

August is block-booked as the entire world decamps north for the festival and the fringe, but the rocky Scottish capital is more than just face-painting and one-man shows.

The medieval Old Town and the Georgian New Town were listed as a Unesco World Heritage Site in 1995 and there are more than 4,500 listed buildings in the city.

The castle sits high on a rocky outcrop overlooking a metropolis that was at the heart of the Scottish Enlightenment and home to an intellectual elite.

Airport: Edinburgh.
Flight time: 1.5 hours.

Q&A

Will working on an exercise ball get rid of my pot belly?

Not necessarily – your pot belly is probably down to too much food, too little exercise and, to a lesser extent, poor posture (if you stand with your back arched and knees locked, you're automatically sticking your tummy out).

Have a look at your belly, if you've got any layers of fat covering your abdominals reduce portion sizes, cut back on snacking and high-cal add-ons and then whittle away fat with plenty of aerobic exercise.

Then think about mastering the exercise ball to tone that area.

FITNESS WITH LAURA WILLIAMS

Get the look: Jennifer Love Hewitt

The 33-year-old actress likes to keep in touch with her feminine side as she keeps fit. And her method is an excellent way for new mothers to shift those extra pounds.

How she does it: The star of The Client List loves to pole dance as a hobby and for a workout. She said: "It's a great way to get in touch with your sexuality too."

Do it for yourself: Pole dancing has increased steadily in popularity over the last few years as women continue to look for fun (and foxy) ways to tone up.

Scores of women are now mastering the art of twisting and gyrating around a metal pole with some even having equipment set up in their own homes. I've sniffed

»Tip of the week

Celebrity advice: Sporty Cameron Diaz has this to say about exercise: "For me, it's a big part of keeping mind and body together. I love getting my heart rate up. I love challenging myself."

at pole dancing as a workout in the past and I still maintain that in an ideal world it should be done in addition to other fitness routines such as aerobic work and weight training. But if you're one of the many people who has no intention of setting foot on a gym floor, it's better than nothing.

Fans of pole dancing maintain that you can really see the benefits particularly in the arms, thighs and buttocks burning up to 400 calories in just one session.

If you're going to give it a go, make sure you're sporting bare legs for a good grip and take some high heels along to the session as well as your trainers.

Probably the most upmarket pole dancing classes, which focus on fitness and technique as much as anything else, are to be found here – poledancingschool.com.

Games likely to go over budget

MPs have expressed alarm that the £9.3billion budget for the Olympic Games might be £2billion short on covering expenditure.

The public accounts committee, under the chairmanship of Barking MP Margaret Hodge, pictured, also raised concerns about the legacy and the dangers of the stadium becoming a white elephant.

Mrs Hodge said: "We are particularly concerned about the significant increases in the security bill. It is staggering that the original estimates were so wrong."

Police hoping crime may fall in summer

POLICE are hoping that levels of crime in London will fall during the 2012 Games, the London Assembly were told.

Metropolitan Police Assistant Commissioner Chris Allison pointed out that overall levels of crime had fallen during the 2010 Vancouver Winter Games and the 2000 Sydney Summer Games.

Victoria Borwick AM, chairwoman of the health and public services committee, said: "It's reassuring to see the sheer scale of planning and preparation the emergency services have put into managing the impact of the Games and how they have taken on board lessons from previous host cities."

RMT considers £850 bonus for working

LONDON Underground workers have been offered a one-off Games bonus of £850.

The Rail Maritime and Transport union has decided to consider the offer for the 18,000 staff affected but has yet to end its dispute.

General secretary Bob Crow said: "Clearly moving from offering nothing to the latest offer of £850 is a massive shift."

"The offer will now be considered by our reps and by the full executive before we make a formal response."

The union had rejected previous offers.

■ Biography: Born March 31, 1979, in Ascot, Berkshire. Attended University of Edinburgh.

■ Form: Burton disappointed in 2008. He's up against tough opposition in his weight class (81kg).

■ Sporting dates: European Championship Bronze, 2005, 2007, 2010. World Championship Bronze, 2007, 2010. Beijing 2008, 7th.

■ He says: "I'm probably the world's best conditioned athlete, in my weight category, but I want to keep pushing the boundaries. I'm not the most explosive guy but to become more so takes a long time and the advantage minimal. Instead, day-in day-out I'm trying to come up with technical answers to problems I face."

■ Olympics: "If you're going to stand at the top of the podium you've got to beat everybody that's in front of you. People know that I can and I know that I can, but I don't think people are expecting it, because I'm not world and Olympic champion."

Euan Burton faces a tough challenge against experienced opponents

Volleyball Docklands fall in tough five-setter

LONDON Docklands fell to their fourth five-set defeat of the season following an inconsistent performance against London Knights.

That was Knights' third victory over Docklands this season and is a severe blow to their promotion hopes. However, a shock Solent loss means it's still mathematically possible for Docklands to finish in second place and clinch a play-off against old rivals Sheffield.

Rugby Blackheath notch up bonus victory

AN outstanding second half performance saw Blackheath collect five tries to record their fifth successive bonus-point victory when they beat Tyndale 34-17.

National League One takes another break next Saturday with the final round of the Six Nations.

Ronnie Chung, left, and Jamie O'Hagan are running the marathon for local charity IDCF

Runners set for challenge

TWO first-timers are taking part in this year's London Marathon to raise money for a Tower Hamlets charity focused on helping disadvantaged communities.

IDCF gives out grants of more than £1million a year to community and voluntary sector groups in the borough.

Ronnie Chung, from Barclays, said: "I was meant to run the marathon last year but ruptured my anterior cruciate ligament and tore my cartilage the Thursday before.

"I had an operation this summer and I've had rehab and I've been training for this year's run. I chose to run for IDCF because I live in the area and have young children and I know what good they do.

"I just want to complete the marathon this year but Barclays will match my fund raising so doubling the amount I raise."

Morgan Stanley employee Jamie Hagan injured his ankle playing football earlier in the year but is back on form.

He said: "I wanted to try to prove I could do it and get fit as well. I did a half marathon and it went well. IDCF is one of Morgan Stanley's charities this year and I wanted to show people that bankers care about the local community."

In total six corporate volunteers are running the London Marathon on behalf of IDCF and money raised will go towards the annual summer programme of activities, outings, sporting competition and training schemes across the Isle of Dogs.

WEEKEND FLUTTER WITH THE RACING POST

BETFRED GOLD CUP

■ This year's renewal of the Betfred Gold Cup looks one to savour with the legend that is Kauto Star trying to win the trophy for a third time at the grand age of 12.

Twice this season he has got the better of his younger rival Long Run, pictured, the winner of this contest last season. The extra test of stamina here over 3m2 1/2f swings the balance slightly in Long Run's favour, but given the way Kauto Star excels in the jumping department, he could easily expose the flaws in Long Run's profile and it makes set for a cracking contest.

Win, lose or draw, Kauto is firmly placed in racing folklore, and if Ruby Walsh can have the veteran jumping the last fence with even the slightest chance of victory, 65,000 spectators will be going bananas. Not a race for a bet, but sit and watch what should be a truly memorable spectacle.

ALBERT BARTLET NOVICE

■ Charles Byrnes deals in quality not quantity when he sends one across the Irish Sea, and Sea Of Thunder looks good each-way value in what is usually a gruelling test of stamina. He was running away with a Grade 2 at Cheltenham earlier in the season when he fell at the last, and with a clear round this time, he can be right in the mix, with the likelihood of good ground being a massive bonus for the seven-year-old.

THE FANS' ROAR

By Ian Toal

We are lacking consistency

WE cannot seem to follow up one good result with another.

After beating Peterborough 3-0 away last week we travelled to Nottingham Forest knowing a win there would be a big step towards our Championship safety.

Unfortunately we went down 3-1 at the City Ground leaving us seven points above relegation. At this rate our safety will go down to the last few games.

It was a disappointing result but not a bad performance. We could have been a couple of goals up but failed to take our chances, hitting the woodwork three times.

We have to take confidence in the way we played and know that if we reproduce that performance in our remaining games – and improve the defending – then we will be fine.

Sadly Liam Trotter looks like he will miss further matches after just returning.

He had a reoccurrence of his quad injury meaning that he had to be subbed at half time in what was his first game back after three missed games.

This will probably give Josh Wright the chance to establish himself in the side and earn a contract for next season in the process.

It has been pleasing to see Darren Ward come back and put in a couple of solid performances. He might not be first choice now but it is important to have players in the squad who can respond when needed. Recent signing Shane Lowry will learn a lot from training alongside Wardy.

“We will need a good performance against Saints

■ Our home form has been a real disappointment this season but this Saturday gives us a real chance to lift ourselves and put that record right when we face title-chasing Southampton.

We have had the full set of results against the Saints this season. We lost 1-0 at St Mary's back in August in the League then drew 1-1 at home in the FA Cup 4th round before winning the replay 3-2 away in a great performance.

We will need to reach that level of performance to get a victory and will have to be on top of our defensive game to keep out star striker Rickie Lambert who was named Football League Player of the Year.

We expect our boys to lift their games though and respond to what should be a decent crowd.

■ Injured Lions midfielder Tamika Mkandawire had something to be pleased about as he was named the PFA Player in the Community for 2012 for the Football League.

Tam has been an ambassador for the "Giving Youth Violence The Red Card" campaign which has been getting the message across to youngsters about the dangers of carrying knives and guns.

WEST HAM

Morrison may be in frame for team debut

Carlton Cole of West Ham jumps to head the ball against Doncaster

RAVEL Morrison, the troubled midfielder offloaded by Manchester Utd for £1million, could make a start in a crucial tie against Leeds at the weekend.

He has yet to make a competitive appearance for West Ham but netted twice in a 2-0 win at Brentford – for the Development Squad.

He was an unused substitute in last Saturday's 1-1 game with Doncaster – the third home draw in a row for the Irons whose promotion-chasing season has stalled.

However Jack Collinson believes West Ham are still in a great position to gain promotion from the Championship.

The No.10 insists the Hammers still have their destiny in their own hands when it comes to regaining their place in the Premier League.

But he admitted that he and his team mates needed to finish off teams – and be more clinical in front of goal – if they are to resume their charge.

"We know as a group that we need to do better in front of goal," he said. "It's not just one person but a whole group thing. I should have got us the points really which would have dug us out of a massive hole."

"We're going to keep working and keep improving and we can go on a nice little run and we can be where we want to be."

"We've got a really good squad and we have some really good strikers. It's up to us as midfielders to create the opportunities for the strikers to put them in the net. Hopefully we can put a little run together and get the confidence going and that starts next week."

"It's still in our hands, which is obviously what we want."

Meanwhile, West Ham have agreed a loan for Portsmouth's goalkeeper Stephen Henderson.

That never-say-die attitude is what has made Roberts a Paralympic legend

Rob.Virtue

There have been some spectacular Olympic moments over the years but the image of a gallant loser is what inspires one of Britain's greatest Paralympians.

David Roberts, who was diagnosed with cerebral palsy at the age of 11, started swimming competitively to help deal with the condition and has gone on to win a staggering 11 gold medals in three Games.

For him the sight of British sprinter Derek Redmond finishing the race in Barcelona '92 despite snapping his hamstring shows the true meaning of the sport.

"It's an iconic moment and says to me what the Olympics is all about," said Welshman Roberts. "The never-say-die attitude and the fact the father went on the track to be with his son."

It's an attitude Roberts displays himself and one that's put him on the brink of Games history.

His golden haul is level with Tanni Grey-Thompson's record and puts him one away from being Britain's most successful Paralympian.

It's a mission he is determined to complete this summer.

"I've won a gold in every Games I've been to so it will be nice to win a gold in London at home," said the 31-year-old, who was speaking at an event sponsored by Jaguar Academy of Sport, mentoring up-and-coming British Olympic and Paralympic prospects. "That's my goal. But first things first, I need to qualify."

"Each Olympics is different but the home Olympics is the ultimate. Once you've done an Olympics you dream of doing one in your home country. There is no greater privilege than competing in front of your home crowd."

His success in the pool has seen him become something of a standard-bearer for the Paralympics – even addressing the Human Rights Council in Geneva to discuss the work ongoing in Britain to promote disabled sport.

Calling himself "just a boy from the Valleys" he's immensely proud of his personal achievements but what he sees as even more important is the championship's rise in popularity.

"My first Games in Sydney was the watershed moment for Paralympics," he said. "We got one hour a day television coverage, which doesn't seem like a lot but we suddenly got a window to the public so they could see what we did and how good we were."

Sydney may have been the watershed but Beijing was confirmation of a whole new fanbase.

"We came back from Sydney and there were 30 to 40 people there to welcome us home and it was lovely. But we came back from Beijing and it took me five hours to get through the airport there was so many people there. We were made up."

"Paralympic athletes are now becoming household names when at the start of my career I could never have imagined that happening."

Powell fury as team get hit by four in first half

Rob.Virtue
@wharf.co.uk

CHRIS Powell vowed to stick by his team after a horror show first-half against Notts County on Saturday that saw them 4-0 down at the break.

Despite a second-half fightback the Addicks ultimately succumbed 4-2 against the play-off hopefuls to result in their second defeat in a week at The Valley following a 2-0 reverse against Colchester United the previous Tuesday.

After Saturday's defeat Powell said he was furious with the performance but went on to defend his table-topping side.

"They're my team and they've been absolutely outstanding this season," he said. "If I take that first half away then they've been a team, my players, my squad, I've been very proud of."

"It was good they showed everyone they can respond [in the second-half] but it was a big ask. Whatever level you are at 4-0 is hard to come back from but they did show they can respond to it and the remaining 10 games they will."

But Powell hinted he felt some within the club could have fallen for the belief the side – still a healthy nine points clear of second placed Sheffield United – were home dry at the top of the table.

He warned he would not allow for complacency.

"I don't want anyone thinking – players, staff or supporters – that we're over the line because that's crept in a bit," he said. "We're not there. We've got the points tally we've got because we've worked hard to get them and played some good football."

"We've dug in when we had to and had a plan A, B and C but you can have as many plans as you want, if you play the football we did in the first period then you're not going to win a football match."

Charlton travel to Scunthorpe this weekend before hosting Yeovil Town at The Valley on Tuesday night.

Golden girls

NEWHAM'S Christine Ohuruogo inspired the GB team to win women's 4x400m gold at the World Indoor Athletics Championships in Istanbul.

The last leg was taken by former Poplar schoolgirl Perri Shakes-Drayton. Team GB picked up a record nine medals.
